

5 WAYS

to find out how you can get involved in volunteering

Examine your interests 2

What's the thing you'll gladly wake up for early in the morning? What's something you just can't shut up about as soon as the topic comes up? Whatever it is – there are volunteering opportunities that relate to it!

4 Do your research

There are plenty of organisations in Australia who can help you to get set up for an existing project, or support you to set up your own. Check out Volunteering Australia, SEEK, and GoVolunteer.

Think about your skills

1 Are you an independent project manager? Or a talented photographer? Take your skills into consideration and adapt your volunteer work to them. Organisations all over Australia are looking for volunteers with a huge range of different skills!

3 Find out what's going on in your community

Take some of your time to go to a local volunteering team. You can find these on the internet or at your university or college. They will gladly help you to find a suitable opportunity.

5 Talk to people with experience Find people who are aware of an opportunity or are already part of a project. Often friends, family and lecturers are the best ways to get connected.
